A message from the Headteacher

It is a complete privilege to be Head of such a wonderful school that is full of such amazing children. They work hard in both their lessons and their relationships. Our C.L.I.M.B. values help us to help the children think about being the best they can be.

Our children are at the heart of what we do. Visitors always comment upon the friendly and purposeful learning environment we have created, and how the children contribute to this through their good manners, respectful attitudes and determination in their learning.

We are continuously developing and refining our curriculum to ensure it is exciting and challenging for all our pupils. After all – if we are named after Sir Edmund Hillary, one of the first people to climb Everest- we owe it to them to have an equally rich curriculum. We aim to broaden our pupils’ cultural capital and deepen their knowledge through excellent teaching, visits, and visitors; ensuring that what they learn in school will stay with them for the rest of their lives and help them thrive in this exciting world in which we live.

Working at Sir Edmund Hillary Academy

Our school motto is “Inspiring Minds and Nurturing All.” This is something that we strive to achieve for pupils, staff and our wider community

Working in our school presents an opportunity to engage with highly motivated children who are eager to learn and grow. Our pupils are not only passionate about their school but also demonstrate curiosity and enthusiasm that inspire educators to innovate and excel in their teaching practices.

Our school fosters a family feel, where caring and supportive colleagues form a tight-knit community. This atmosphere encourages collaboration and the sharing of best practices, ensuring that everyone can thrive and enhance their skills.

We are embarking on an exciting phase of refurbishment at the school, combined with educational innovation. This not only enriches the teaching experience but also opens doors to numerous opportunities for personal and professional growth. By joining our school, you will become part of a forward-thinking institution committed to excellence in education.
